PINCHOT'S FRIENDS WON MAJORITY OF COUNTIES IN PENNA.

Governor's Office Issues A Statement On Tuesday's Election

MENTIONS 15 COUNTIES

Allegheny County is Now Definitely in Pinchot Column

HARRISBURG, Sept. 19.—(INS)—The Governor's office today issued a summary of the results of last Tuesday's primary in which it was asserted "friends of Governor Pinchot were successful in the great majority of Pennsylvania counties." The statement was not attributed to the Governor, who is at Millford, but to "attaches of the Governor's office."

The statement mentioned specifically fifteen counties where either the entire Pinchot ticket or at least one major candidate was claimed to have won under the Governor's banner.

Text of the statement follows: "Attaches of the Governor's office today declared that in last Tuesday's primary election friends of Governor Pinchot were successful in the great majority of Pennsylvania counties."

"In Allegheny County, it was pointed out, the nomination of Senator William D. Mansfield and Col. Charles C. McGovern as county commissioners was a distinct victory for the friends of Governor Pinchot, who also put across their councilmanic slate. Allegheny County, said the Governor's office, is definitely in the Pinchot column."

"The entire ticket back in Luzerne County by friends of the Governor was nominated and the last vestige of the old Gallagher-Joyce machine was destroyed."

"The demonstration of the Pinchot following in Philadelphia was finer than anything for the last ten years and the result was a number of anti-Vare victories. The demonstration on behalf of Judge Vivian Frank Gable is remarkable."

"In Fayette County the Pinchot friends routed the foes headed by Public Service Commissioner Ray Shelby."

"In Schuylkill the defeat of Judge Koch, rabidly anti-Pinchot, is evidence of the trend of sentiment. It is not yet certain that Paul W. Houck, another Pinchot enemy, was successful in his contest for the Republican nomination for county treasurer."

"In Lebanon the entire ticket backed by friends of the Governor was nominated."

"The same thing was true in Cumberland and Franklin counties."

"In Mifflin County, Judge Lehman, recently appointed by the Governor, was successful despite opposition by the Governor's foes."

"In Westmoreland County, candidates backed by friends of the Governor won easily."

"In Cambria County the Governor's friends put across their choice for district attorney."

"In Bedford County, Judge Madore, recently appointed by the Governor, was successful against Harry C. James, for many years Republican County chairman."

"In Huntingdon County, Charles Brewster, a member of the Legislature during Governor Pinchot's first term, was nominated for district attorney with support of the Governor's friends."

"In Blair County the ticket backed by the Pinchot people was successful and in the City of Altoona Mayor John J. McMurray ran away from Orr, the candidate of the Pinchot foes."

"In Centre and virtually every rural county in Pennsylvania, the candidates supported by the Governor's friends won easily."

"The analysis of Tuesday's results as made by attaches of the Governor's office indicates a rising tide of Pinchot sentiment in Pennsylvania," the statement concluded.

Bristol Man Injured In Auto Crash at Wheatshaf

Domenick Sciarrio, 406 Logan street, was painfully injured yesterday in an automobile accident at Wheatshaf.

Sciarrio, accompanied by two other men, was returning from Trenton. Upon attempting to cross the canal bridge at Wheatshaf, another car, driven by Edward Fredericks, of Wheatshaf, started to cross the bridge from the opposite direction and the car in which Sciarrio was riding struck the Fredericks car.

Sciarrio was the only occupant of the car injured. His arm was badly broken and lacerated.

He was taken to the Harriman Hospital for treatment and is still confined to that institution.

Fredericks was uninjured.

INJURES EYE

While returning from work yesterday, Daniel Ferry, of Washington street, slipped from the tailboard of a truck, severely cutting his left eye, which required several stitches. He was treated at the Harriman Hospital.

FIVE CONVICTS CAUGHT AFTER FOURTEEN ESCAPE

Sensational Break for Liberty At Newcastle County Workhouse

$500 REWARD FOR EACH

WILMINGTON, Del., Sept. 19.—Five of the fourteen convicts who escaped from the Newcastle County Workhouse, a few miles south of here, in the most sensational jailbreak ever occurring at the prison, were in the toils of the law again today. Three of the convicts were recaptured early today, according to reports reaching here, while the other two were seized shortly after the break.

Rewards of $500 each for the recapture dead or alive of the men still at liberty spurred police and posse of armed citizens on in a frantic hunt today for those still at liberty.

The three arrested early today are said to be: John Whalen, Robert Martin and James Olson. According to Warden Elmer J. Leach, this trio was among the ringleaders of the plot. Facts concerning their recapture were missing from the reports received here. The other two retaken were Negroes. The first captured, Clarence Coles, was halted in his flight by a bullet wound in his shoulder just outside the prison walls. The other convict, Robert Manuel, was seized about a mile from the prison when he attempted to steal an automobile. A woman heard him in the garage and knowing of the jailbreak, screamed, attracting the attention of two neighbors who overpowered the man.

Three airplanes and bloodhounds were brought into use immediately after the break by police, state police and an armed posse of citizens, and the entire countryside was scoured for miles. Nearly cities were notified to be on the lookout for the criminals.

Grand Jury Ignores Fourteen Bills in Week

DOYLESTOWN, Sept. 19.—Fourteen bills were ignored by the Grand Jury this week in criminal court, a number of them being cases of alleged drunken drivers who were not examined by physicians after being arrested. Forty-three were returned true bills out of the fifty-seven before the Grand Jury.

After completing the court work the Grand Jury inspected the public buildings and yesterday submitted the report to Judges Hiram H. Keller and Calvin S. Boyer. The foreman of the Grand Jury was L. Creighton Vandegrift, of Eddington.

In the written report the Grand Jury submitted, it was recommended that the present Court House either be enlarged or alterations made as quickly as possible so that the congestion in the various offices can be relieved. Particular mention was made of the congestion in the office of the Recorder of Deeds, the Sheriff, Clerk of Quarter Sessions and the County Treasurer.

A visit was made to the County Prison where everything was found to be in excellent condition. The jury also approved plans for two new bridges.

LEGIONNAIRES GIVEN CONVENTION CITY ROUTE

Distance from Bristol to Detroit is 650 Miles; Thru Scenic Section

CHOICE IS GIVEN

For the benefit of Legionnaires who desire to make the trip to Detroit by motor to attend the annual convention of the American Legion to be held there for four days starting September 21, the Keystone Automobile Club has outlined an attractive tour to the convention city.

"The distance to Detroit is 650 miles," says Russell B. Carly, representative of the motor club. "The tour has been planned to cover the most direct route and at the same time traverse only the best highways available. The return journey can be made by the way of Windsor, Canada to Niagara Falls and Buffalo."

From Bristol the tour leads over the Roosevelt Boulevard, Hunting Park Ave. and City Line avenue to Overbrook where a right turn to the Lincoln Highway, U. S. Route 30 carries the travelers to Lancaster. Here a right turn is made into U. S. Route 230 leading to Harrisburg. From the state capital U. S. Route 11 is used to Clarks Ferry where the Susquehanna River is crossed. At Amity Hall a left turn is made into the William Penn Highway, U. S. Route 22 which carries the tourists through the beautiful Juniata Valley and over a winding course to Ebensburg.

From Ebensburg the state highway is used to Beasano where U. S. Route 422 is met and followed through Indiana, Pa.; Kittanning, Butler and New Castle and across the state boundary to Youngstown, Ohio. From this point state route 18 is followed through Akron to Norwalk where U. S. Route is met and used to Fremont. Eight miles west of Fremont a right turn into state route 102 carries the travelers into Toledo, one of the most modern cities along the Great Lakes. From this point the tourists have the choice of two routes leading northward to Detroit. Over U. S. Route 25, however, the journey winds along the Lake Erie shore and through Monroe entering Detroit over Fort Street which leads to the heart of the city.

COURAGE AND FAITH NEED OF THE DAY

Rev. L. T. Moore Addresses Epworth League Group Meeting Here

125 IN ATTENDANCE

"The Challenge to Youth of Today" formed the topic base for an address in Bristol M. E. Church, last evening, when Rev. Leon T. Moore, pastor of Wissinoming M. E. Church, spoke to 125 members of the Bristol Group Epworth League at a bi-monthly rally. Speaking of clean thinking and courageous action, the minister stated "There has always been an age for the right thinker. There are two words that focus a challenge on our day—faith and courage. It takes courage to run a business, and the biggest business of the world is the business of our Christ."

The Rev. Moore advocated faith in God, faith in oneself, and faith in fellowmen. "And have the courage to do things," he added. "Our need is a greater faith-life in the day in which we live. It takes courage to be a Christian—to stand up for Jesus Christ in the world."

Leagues represented at last night's meeting included: Bristol, Bensalem, Langhorne, Hulmeville, Trevose, Fallsington, New Hope and Scottsville.

Two groups of Leaguers vied for honors in the presentation of song numbers. Scottsville and Bristol both gave selections, the latter being presented with the banner for such. Percentage and attendance banners were given to the Scottsville organization. The banner given the league having the best musical selection last evening, will be awarded the league having the best reading at the November rally in Yardley M. E. Church.

A Halloween party is scheduled for Friday evening, October 23rd, this taking place at Bensalem Church social hall.

A committee was appointed to discuss the matter of formation of a basketball league among the leagues of the group. The members of such committee are: Rev. Raymond Nickerson, of Penns Park; Arthur McCarthy, of Penns Park; George Bilger, of Bensalem; Walter Weller, of Scottsville; Arthur Peterson, of Bristol.

The winner of the Bucks County Bankers' Association Freshman scholarship given each year to the second best contestant in the State Scholarship Examination, held in the various counties of the State, is awarded this year to Florence Ozias, of Quakertown, Bucks County.

She then hopes to take a year of extensive library training work at Drexel, after finishing at Penn.

STREET CARS NOT DOOMED

Struggling under the staggering effects of automobile competition, congested streets and inadequate capital, electric railways still see a ray of hope. Their owners and operators have largely lost their fear that the motor bus will put the electric cars and tracks on the scrap heap, having met this threat in many cities by operating bus lines as auxiliaries to the electric lines.

The private automobile remains their great problem, as it cuts both ways, taking away a heavy percentage of revenue that would otherwise go to street railways and hindering operation by clogging the highways. All electric lines were declaring dividends before popularizing of the automobile; now many that have not been driven out of business are operating at a loss.

While thousands of miles of track have been torn up since the war and more will be torn up in the years to come, there is a conviction that no other method of transportation as yet devised can take the place of the street car in populous centers. As an essential public utility it will overcome the difficulties and solve the problems that threaten it.

If they are to win back their old patrons and attract new ones the street railways must improve their equipment, speed-up service and make radical changes in policy. Quieter, more luxurious and more externally attractive cars are helping in some cities. Smoother tracks bring business in others. Better trained and more accommodating car crews would attract patronage.

THE TIRELESS SLAVE

The ancient philosophers could not conceive of a civilization not based upon the labor of slaves. Men who could think had to have the leisure afforded by the service of those forced to toil.

But thought has produced in our day a method of enlisting energies more efficient than those in the sinews of men. Research workers in the University of California have proved that a strong man can evidence energy of one and one-half horse power for a few seconds. An electric motor not much larger than the crown of a derby hat may have a capacity of one and one-half horse power and operate continuously at a cost of less than 15 cents an hour.

So, when the modern factory worker is put in charge of a machine run by electricity he becomes the boss of a gang of slaves estimated to be the equivalent of 10 men in each machine horse power, and these slaves toil without weariness, pain or rebellion.

This fact in part accounts for the tremendous superiority in productive capacity of the modern over the ancient world. And it explains why the hours of labor constantly decrease while the buying power of the workers constantly increases.

Lives of great men often remind us there must be money in biography.

Any town is a good town to the man who thinks it silly to waste more than 20 minutes at lunch.

CHAPTER XXXVI.

"HAS he got the sales slips?"

asked Thatcher Colt.

Well, as to that, Detective Gernsback couldn't say. The commissioner hadn't ordered him to find out anything about sales slips. What he had asked him to do was to find the origin of the pillow cases and that, Detective Gernsback, who seemed to think his good fortune was an evidence of superior cunning and competence, had triumphantly accomplished. Sales slips were no part of his thoughts and by voice and rolling eyes he gave the Commissioner to understand that.

"Come on, Tony," said Thatcher Colt, "let's go down there and see what we can find."

The office of the Wigglesworth Pillow and Case Factory was just off Fifth Ave. in the 30s—a crowded region, with dark buildings, brass-plated with foreign names and trundle wagons dodging through the trucks and limousines, pushed by men whose faces were hidden by the racks of dresses and coats which they propelled. Mr. Pearlman, the Manhattan agent for the Wigglesworth Co., was greatly flattered when Thatcher Colt entered his office and his three stenographers stared up open-mouthed from their machines at the immaculate Police Commissioner.

Cash Slips.

With suave kindness, Thatcher explained what we were there for. Did Mr. Pearlman keep records of all his sales? Mr. Pearlman hemmed and hawed and said well, yes and no, and he couldn't be sure without looking. These particular pillow cases had been sold for cash and the duplicate delivery slips might have been destroyed. However, if we didn't mind waiting, he would investigate.

Presently he returned with the duplicate delivery slips in his hand. For this time, at least, we were playing in luck—that element which Thatcher Colt maintains cannot be disregarded in the investigation of a crime, the conduct of a war, or any other gamble in human affairs. As he gave the slips into the Commissioner's hands, Mr. Pearlman explained that every one of the pillows and cases was accounted for by those little pieces of paper.

Seven stores had bought these cases. I quickly made stenographic notes of the names and addresses, and cutting short the effusive conversation of Mr. Pearlman, who would have a great story to tell his undoubtedly large family at the dinner table that night, we hurried off, Thatcher Colt, Gernsback and I, to make the round of the shops.

They were in widely separated areas. Again we were in an automobile—Neil McMahon was at the wheel, driving first to a little dry-goods and notion shop on Third Avenue. The proprietor was a loud-voiced, heavy and asthmatic Irish woman, who was not impressed at all by the three of us, but immediately on hearing our questions called down a box of bolts on the maker of those pillow cases. She had bought them at a bargain and yet had never been able to sell one pair of them. They were still on her shelves. We counted them up, checking them against the quantity indicated on the delivery sheet and found that her indignation was justified. . . . She still had them all.

Again we sallied forth, and again luck favored Thatcher Colt. We found ourselves at the store of one Joseph Schnutz, a dealer in household furnishings, in Fourteenth Street, and to Thatcher Colt's delight he learned at once that Mr. Schnutz was a man of accounts and entries, a careful merchant who had exhaustive records of all his transactions.

"Did you buy any pillow cases like this one?" asked Thatcher Colt, thrusting the piece which Gernsback had used, under his eyes.

Indeed he had. Mr. Schnutz fervently declared that he considered those pillow cases the most beautiful he had ever handled in his thirty-five years as a merchant in the neighborhood.

"Did you ever sell any of them?" asked Thatcher Colt.

Mr. Schnutz sadly shook his head.

"Only one pair," he replied.

"The people of today are altogether lacking in an artistic appreciation of beautiful things."

But did he know to whom he had sold them?

"I remember the sale perfectly," said the merchant to Thatcher Colt. "It was a lady with a little girl—pretty little girl—who bought that pair of pillow cases, after she saw them in the window. Where is that sales check?"

With folded arms and an expression of the deepest melancholy, Thatcher Colt waited. He did not seem in the slightest degree disconcerted when the merchant, having found the paper he sought, put his glasses on the tip of his nose and calmly read from one of his sales slips:

"The name was Mrs. Felise Morgan, of 186 Washington Square, North."

The pillow slip which was found over the head of the buried Geraldine Foster had been purchased by the mother of little Doris Morgan.

At once I became a prey to the most hideous and fantastic suspicions.

First it seemed to me as if this latest discovery completely shattered all possibility of Dr. Maskell's innocence. In another instant my rapid-changing theories would clear the physician, only to conjure before me an entirely different and unthinkable accusation.

Had Felise Morgan killed Geraldine Foster?

Even at this late date, when so many of the clues were already obviously at hand, even after what Thatcher Colt had said to me, I rejected the idea as impossible. A woman wield that murderous axe, deal those awful blows, and then, alone and unaided, bury that body after soaking it in a bathtub full of tannic acid? I felt like shuddering at the very notion.

Why should Felise Morgan want to kill Geraldine? Unless it was because she was in love with Dr. Maskell and was jealous or afraid.

The mother of little Doris must be the woman whose name the physician had kept so loyally.

The Woman Unmasked.

I glanced at Thatcher Colt, beside whom I sat in the department car. He was watching me with an amused and almost paternal smile.

"It's hard to figure out, isn't it?" he said banteringly. "But one thing is perfectly clear."

"What is that?"

"Dr. Maskell is in love with Felise Morgan."

"You think that a woman as lovely—"

"I put nothing beyond the possibilities. God knows that women have killed women before, and they have not scrupled to use an axe, if it suited their purposes."

"Is that why, do you think, Dr. Maskell is so secretive about it?"

"Did you notice the love beam- ing in his eye when he looked at Doris, the day we rode around town in the car?"

"I did observe that."

"For that child he would do anything. It is a case of mad heroics, I suppose. Maskell would rather take all the blame even if innocent than ruin the life of that little girl. He may even think Felise is guilty. He possibly remembers Ruth Snyder and her child."

"Do you actually think Mrs. Morgan is guilty?"

Thatcher Colt shook his head in plain perplexity.

"That is what I have come here to find out," he replied.

We were at the north side of Washington Square, once more in front of the house in which Doctor Maskell had his offices, and on the second floor of which lived Doris Morgan and her beautiful mother.

As we started up the stairs, a man passed us, coming out. He was a thick-set, heavy shouldered man, wrapped in a large fur overcoat, and he hurried down the street with a swaggering, self-conscious gait. As he passed us, he gave us one disdainful glance. The next moment, some one else ran down the steps, chattering in a low voice to himself. It was Checkles, the doctor's hunchbacked chauffeur, and he was plainly bent on following the first man.

Followed.

"Just seeing where he goes—I suspect him," cried Checkles to Thatcher Colt, as he leaped to the sidewalk and hopped away.

"Who on earth is the man Checkles is following?" I asked.

"That is Gilbert Morgan—the father of Doris and the husband of Felise."

I was tingling with suspense as we approached the door of the Morgan apartment, the same door before which we had stood the night we had first visited Betty's apartment. After ringing, we had barely time to catch our breath before the door was opened by a tall, long-armed woman with severe features and thin black hair brushed tightly over her head. She looked at us with eyes that seemed to burn their way past all our barriers of caution. She recognized Colt at once; he had been here before.

"Mrs. Morgan will see you in a moment," she said. "Please come in."

She led us down a wide hall, charmingly laid out and decorated, into a small cabinet-like place that opened off the grand drawing-room of the suite. Here we were left, to study the charming water colors on the wall, especially one aquarelle of a painted sail, which, as I learned later, had been done by Felise—she was an amateur painter, I looked at Thatcher Colt, choosing him by that unfailing instinct for authority that belongs to the very old and the very young. With her pale fingers on his wrist, she said:

"Make Felise tell you the truth. She stays here because of me. I am not worth it. Tell her to follow her heart—I can take care of myself."

"Who are you?" asked Thatcher Colt.

"The old woman related to the door and then, looking over her left shoulder at the Commissioner, she added:

"You tell her that and make her do it and you may prevent another murder!"

With this cryptic utterance, she started out of the room.
